Religion of Jesus, Unchanged and Unfaded, Still Is God's Message to Man.

SENSE OF EVIL LESSENED REV. P. A. SIMPKIN PREACHES

ON TENDENCY OF TIME.

At Phillips Congregational church last evening Rev. P. A. Simpkin, the pastor, dwelt on the present day religious tendencies and developments. "Apart from the miracle of Christ's permanence and enlargement in two thousand years of the past," he said, "the

'We realize that 'change is changeless' "We realize that 'change is changeless' in our day. Very many variations in religious expression are about our doors. The significant thing in them is that they all hark back to Christ for ideal, message and authority, and it is not too much to expect, as one looks into the future, that the note of value each may hold will in tomorrow's history be coordinated into the abiding harmony. Not to confuse, however, the gospel and the to confuse, however, the gospel and the church in all its expressions, the mes-sage abiding will survive through all Fills a Need.

"The gospel of Jesus is eternal. It will survive because it holds not only the message of God to man, but more because that message is to the universal soul and strikes its need. It stands on a platform which lends an infinite dignity to the children of men, for all its motive and all the play of its life are about that fact in man which establishes his relationship in the eternal attributes of his moral being "The religions of yesterday died be-cause they failed so to do. Jesus sought the controlling things—the faith, the love and the will of men, and that which so deals with human nature is to meet its

Van Midgley and George Klink, violinits.

"The universal is a twin note to the eternal in his messages. The racial endowment of the divine with all its possibilities of response is in the forefront of his teaching. He who voiced this gospel found that value in every life he touched, whether the not over-clean child whom he caressed by the roadside and made the type of the kingdom of heaven, the sinner whose value loomed from a sycamore tree by the roadside, or the woman with the painted face and the vivid character to whom much was forgiven, and who, responding to his message, found the power of his gospel and "Charles Kent sang "The Minstrel Boy" S sage, found the power of his gospel and came to know the blessedness of his reaches every life in its condition and need. That condition is the one which speaks the corruption of the heart and the need of life. For Jesus' message, this abiding message, is to sin in the life.

"The tendency of our time to lose sight of the real sinfulness of sin under the euphemisms of 'brain storm' and the like, and to soften the outleap of hate and low passion through the glasses of 'higher haw,' and social degeneracy is only a new form of a world-old tendency, a desire to lessen the sense of evil and the awfulness of inquity. The age has lost its peace and joy, its enjoyment of life and love, its attainment of the highest, by sin, and it is needless to touch the problem except to write Q. E. D. thereto.

"Men know too well the truth for need of proof. Here is the vital thing. That Jesus in his 'gospel abiding' has the only message to sin that the age has known, the only relief for its burden, the only gure for its wound, the only life for its death.

"The age ought to see ere this that inquity, however gross or refined, is only modulated by ail other things, it is only modulated by ail other things, it is only modulated by ail other things, it is only

"The age ought to see ere this that inquity, however gross or refined, is only modulated by ail other things, it is only radically and satisfactorily touched in the religion of Jesus. The God love that is expressed and the God life that is brought near in him are the things by which alone we find cleansing for the life and the approval that will draw us to the perfect things.

"Bever line to read to see ere this that inquity, however gross or refined, is only seen at the Grand in many a long day. E. D. Pitsor as "Jim Cummings", is bright. He bubbles over with vivacity and his laugh is infectious. Zam Hayes as "Mary Slocum" is another who made a decided hit with the audience last evening. Her make-up, songs and her acting would cure the worst case of blue devils that ever came to town. Grace Bell Gilmore than a milion dollars.

and the approval that will draw us to the perfect things.

"Revealing to man the infinite values, enabling him to see his moral needs, which are alike unchanging in the years, bringing the 'way' to him for realization of the highest, co-ordinating the human and divine to perfectness in will, in love, in service, training the tendrils of the human soul across the chasm of death and into the realm of the infinite, this reman soul across the chasm of death and into the realm of the Infinite, this religion, unchanging and unfading, goes on to possess the age, because it holds the only message to the unchanging needs of men, the only answer to the questions of the age, the only revealed purpose of the master of things, who program sweeps from earth's human brokenness to heaven's perfect destiny."
